Georgia Newsmen Irritate U2 Pilot

ROME, Ga. (UPI)—Francis Gary Powers, the U2 pilot recently freed by the Russians, arrived here yesterday for a secret meeting with his wife and found a battery of newsmen instead.

Powers appeared irritated that his arrival attracted wide-spread attention. He said he and Mrs. Powers had "been hoping for privacy."

Mrs. Barbara Powers arrived from her Milledgeville, Ga., home nearly two hours after Francis Gary her husband.

Powers Powers, who had been waiting at the home of Rev. John Crowe, raced out of the house, slipped into the driver's seat of his wife's car, embraced Barbara, whom he hadn't seen in about a week, and then drove off.

Powers declined to say where they were going but indicated they might be returning within a few days to his family's home in Pound, Va. Earlier reports indicated the couple might have been going to Milledgeville last night.

Powers drove here in about 6½ hours from Norton, Va., with George Hunnicutt, a soft drink company official. He appeared tired after the journey.

He said his recent physical examination showed he had "a little stomach and intestinal trouble" but no ulcers. He said doctors gave him some medicine which was expected to clear up his trouble soon.

Powers said it would be about two more weeks before he returns to work for the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA).
